HyperMotion allows football fans to experience the dynamic movement of high-intensity football matches right on their TV screen. It combines the power of physics and artificial intelligence to map real-life players' movements onto the game-specific, skill-based gameplay systems of FIFA. A central player in the development of the game is adidas, which worked with developers PES to enable the real-life football movement of 22 real-world players. The adidas data was collected at the FIFA World Cup in Brazil, during the finals of the 2014/15 UEFA Champions League and during a highly specific, real-world training session designed to mimic a game-like environment. To ensure FIFA's "Immersion" system, also powered by adidas, performed effectively in a real-world setting, the developer made adjustments to camera controls and the timing of on-screen player animations in the first part of the player data collection process. Following the highly visible football market and sponsorship deals that FIFA 19 saw, the developer has worked to make its presence felt at the FIFA World Cup™. FIFA's FIFA World Cup Trophy is the fan-made title in the FIFA World Cup series that has seen the most entries since FIFA 11's World XI Stadium. A total of 11 versions of the FIFA World Cup Trophy have been created by fans for the tournament, with teams and players featured including Mexico 1994, Mexico 2018, Brazil 2014, Brazil 2014, Germany 2014, Germany 2014, France 1998, France 1998, France 1998, USA 2018, USA 2018 and USA 2018. Prolonged Opioid Treatment of Crohn's Disease Is Associated With a Major Reduction in the Risk of Anastomotic Recurrence after Ileocolic Bypass. Anastomotic recurrence of Crohn's disease is a challenge in the surgical treatment of ileocolic Crohn's disease. The aim of this study was to assess the impact of prolonged opioid treatment on anastomotic recurrence following ileocolic bypass surgery in patients with Crohn's disease. A prospective, cohort study was conducted on consecutive patients with Crohn's disease who underwent ileocolic bypass surgery. Clinical outcomes, including fecal incontinence and obstructive symptoms, were evaluated by a physician blinded to opioid treatment status. Opioid treatment was considered prolonged for patients using opioids for ≥ 3 months postoperatively. There were a total of 169 ileocolic bypass procedures in 163 patients with ileocolic Crohn's disease. The median follow-up period was 37 months. The proportion of prolonged opioid treatment after surgery ($n = 36$) was 8.3% (8/96). After a median of 37 months, the probability of anastomotic recurrence was significantly lower in patients with prolonged opioid treatment than in those without (hazard ratio, 0.18; 95% confidence interval, 0.03-0.96; $P = 0.045$). Postoperative opioid use was associated with a lower risk of anastomotic recurrence ($P = 0.011$). Prolonged opioid treatment was significantly associated with a lower risk of anastomotic recurrence following ileocolic bypass surgery. Therefore, prolonged opioid therapy might be effective in the treatment of Crohn's disease.

S.C. § 2401(b). To avoid this result, Southerland argues that the FTCA's doctrine of sovereign immunity is merely procedural; therefore, the statute of limitations in the FTCA should apply only to the claims it encompasses.
