Hetman. This invention is directed to the selective adsorption of oxygen from a gas containing said oxygen by a solid adsorbent so as to produce a product gas containing oxygen depleted from said gas and having a lower oxygen concentration than said gas. It is common practice in the manufacture of semiconductor devices to utilize "wet" chemical processing techniques which use corrosive solutions containing various reagents. Such wet processing involves the use of hazardous chemicals, and as a consequence the environment in which such wet processing is carried out is highly controlled. Since semiconductor device technology is growing rapidly, it is anticipated that there will be a shortage of semiconductor manufacturing facilities having the necessary equipment and the facilities to control hazardous chemicals and utilize hazardous chemicals. Many potentially valuable compounds, particularly gases, are difficult to use in wet chemical processing because of their reactive nature. One of these, oxygen, is needed to convert the halides of gallium, aluminum, etc., to their elemental state. In view of the need for a safe and inexpensive method for selectively adsorbing oxygen from a gaseous mixture of gases, it is an object of this invention to provide such a method. It is a further object of this invention to provide a simplified, safe, and efficient apparatus for the selective adsorption of oxygen from a gas containing said oxygen. I hate dogs. Well, I don't really hate them, I'm just wary of them. I was a dog lover in my youth, but my attitude towards them changed when my wife and I had a new (then) toddler son. It ventricular tachycardia. Ventricular tachycardia (VT) originating from the left ventricular endocardium has been well documented in the canines with experimental myocardial infarction. The purpose of this investigation was to characterize the electrophysiologic properties of the spontaneously inducible VT. The electrocardiographic potentials, the effective refractory period, the QT interval, and the morphology of the P-wave were measured during VT. A tissue electrogram was recorded simultaneously. VT was induced by atrial stimulation and was initiated by repetitive atrial stimuli within a very short time interval. VT originating from the left ventricular endocardium was characterized by recurrent episodes of relatively uniform rate with long cycle length. It was dependent on the site of origin of the tachycardia, the arrhythmic triggering stimulus, and the electrical state of the heart. A change in the morphology of the P wave, occurring shortly after the initiation of VT, preceded a change
